the 272 needed for a simple majority on its own and far less than the 303 seats it had won in the 2019 general election. For the first time since the BJP came to power in the Centre in 2014, the party was forced to rely on its allies in the National Democratic Alliance (NDA), chiefly Nitish Kumar's Janata Dal (United) and Chandrababu Naidu's Telugu Desam Party, to cobble together a majority. The NDA's overall tally, too, had dropped to a low of 293 compared to the 353 in 2019.

PER CENT of those aged 55+ rate PM Modi's performance as 'outstanding' or 'good', compared with 52 per cent among 18–24-year-olds

Less than two years after that setback, the MOTN survey of January 2026 reveals how both Modi and the BJP have regained their mojo. If the Lok Sabha election were held now, the BJP could win 287 seats on its own, 15 more than the requirement for a simple majority. What's more, the total tally of the ruling NDA would go up from 293 to a handsome 352 seats. This is just one short of the 353 seats that the NDA actually won in the 2019 general election, its highest tally in the past three
