parliamentary elections.

This is not the first MOTN poll since the 2024 Lok Sabha election that has shown the BJP crossing the simple majority mark. The February 2025 MOTN gave the BJP 281 seats on its own, with the numbers going up largely because the party got its act together quickly and registered big wins in the Maharashtra and Haryana assembly polls in the winter of 2024. However, in the August 2025 MOTN poll, the BJP's tally dropped to 260, mainly because of the perception that the massive 50 per cent tariffs that US president Donald Trump imposed on Indian exports in his second term would hurt the economy and lead to higher unemployment and inflation rates. Nor did the success of Operation Sindoor translate into the expected bump in ratings for the prime minister, with Trump's oft-repeated claim that he had brokered the peace between India and Pakistan, undermining the Indian narrative.

MODI AND THE BJP BOTH HAVE REGAINED THEIR MOJO, AS THE MOTN SHOWS THE PARTY WINNING A MAJORITY ON ITS OWN WITH 287 SEATS, ITS HIGHEST IN THE PAST 3 POLLS

Congress's Loss, BJP's Gain

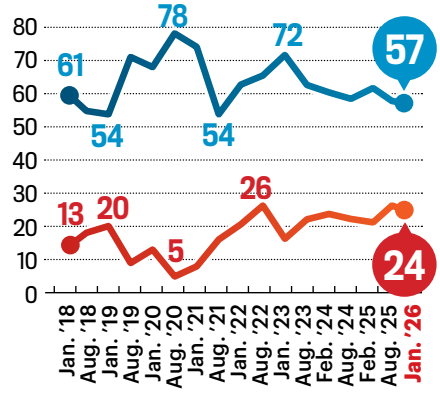

Despite global and regional uncertainty being a constant companion, six months later, Modi has effected a dramatic turnaround by pushing the BJP numbers past the majority mark once again, with the party bagging 27 out of the 28 seats that the NDA has collectively gained during this period. One major reason is the BJP's massive victories in the Bihar and Delhi assembly polls, with ally JD(U) in the former and on its own steam in the national capital. The overall vote share of the NDA may have increased only marginally from 46.7 per cent to 47.4 per cent as has that of the BJP from 40.6 per cent to 40.9 per cent, but the perception that
