HAT-TRICK MANDATE
PM Narendra Modi with NDA allies after the coalition secured a third consecutive general election victory, Jun. 5, 2024

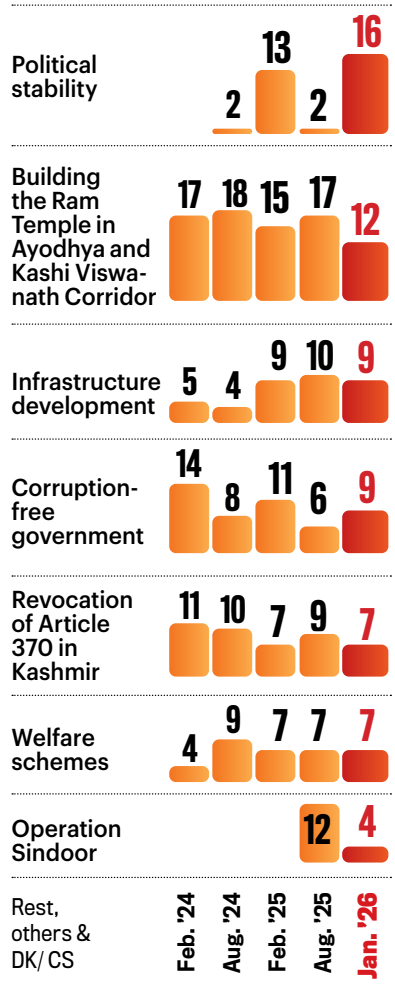

the Congress-led Indian National Development Inclusive Alliance (INDIA) is losing ground, especially after its string of setbacks in assembly polls, seems to have resulted in a 2 percentage point drop in the vote share of the primary Opposition parties. This has translated into significant gain for the BJP and, thereby, for the NDA.

However, there are many more reasons for Modi and the NDA's impressive performance in this MOTN poll than just the big victories in the spate of assembly elections. The validation of the voters' trust in Modi's leadership to successfully navigate many crises the nation has faced in the past six months is evident on many fronts. A high 57 per cent of those surveyed rate his performance as prime minister 'outstanding' or 'good', which should be enormously satisfying for the prime minister in his 12th year on the job. The overall performance of the NDA government gets high ratings, too, with 52.1 per cent saying they are 'very satisfied' or 'satisfied'. The percentage of those remaining 'unsatisfied' is less than 24, suggesting a very limited anti-incumbency trend.

There is also no real challenge to Modi's leadership from the Opposition camp. Asked who is best suited to be India's next prime minister, 54.7 per cent of the respondents preferred Modi, a good 3 percentage points higher than the previous MOTN survey in August. His prime challenger, Rahul Gandhi of the Congress, continues to be a distant second with 26.6 per cent ratings, despite the 2 percentage point jump. West Bengal chief minister Mamata Banerjee comes third in the list,
