Q. What do you think about the current state of democracy in India?

The near-even split between those who believe democracy is "in danger" and those who say "it's not" signals a persistently polarised perception

Q. Do you believe elections in India are free and fair?

A clear majority trusts the electoral process, but the sharp rise in scepticism since the last poll points to a gradual erosion of faith

74%

support 'one nation, one poll', up from 65 per cent six months ago

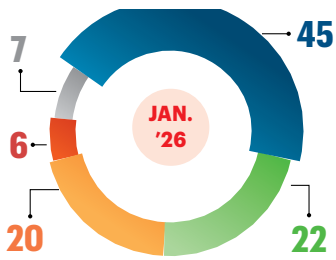

ARUN KUMAR

50%

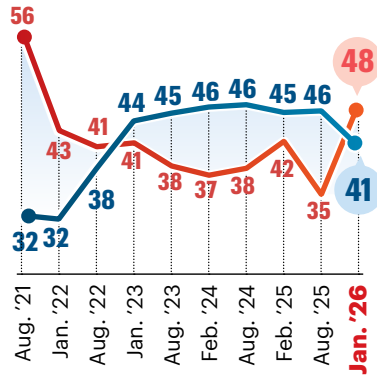

believe political parties should be barred from promising or distributing freebies

Q. Who do you think has the primary responsibility to stop political parties from promising or distributing freebies during elections?

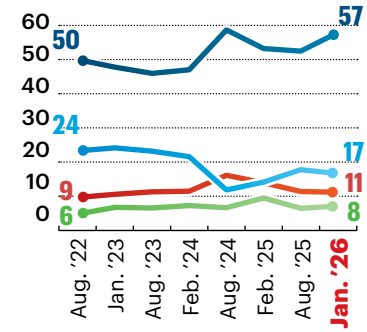

Voters place the onus on the Election Commission, expecting democratic integrity to be enforced institutionally, not left to political morality

Q. Do you think the BJP government misuses enforcement agencies such as the ED, CBI and I-T department more than other governments?

More respondents perceive misuse by governments of all stripes rather than by the BJP alone, signalling a widening cynicism about the exercise of state power beyond party lines

Q. Do you feel free to express your opinion on politics and religion?

Even as a majority says it feels free to express opinions, a significant minority signals unease about a narrowing civic space

All figures in % and rounded off; DK/ CS: Don't know/ can't say