Q+A

WHY INNER PEACE MATTERS

In his new book, You Can Have it All*, monk and motivational speaker* Gaur Gopal Das challenges conventional markers of achievement, urging readers to look for true happiness, beyond satus and validation

Q. What does the title of your book mean?

When it comes to success, everything can go my way, I can have it all: good life, status, influence. But life does not work like that all the time. If you don't have inner peace and joy, what is the point of living? So, the book is an attempt to redefine your life. It brings together 10 life-changing principles woven in an engaging way.

Q. What is the secret sauce to a great life?

A life lived in harmony is living a great life. We are living a life based on what is expected by others—educating oneself, getting married, having kids.... We live a life of validation. We don't live for ourselves. Taking charge of your own happiness in your own hands is a good sauce for a great life.

Q. What do you find appealing about Gen Z?

Gen Z has huge potential, skill sets and big dreams. We need to understand that it is not their call or fault to be born as Gen Z. They are privileged but not insensitive. They live a fast life—digital payments, instant delivery, instant gratification, etc. Living life in reality is something else. They need to realise that happiness is not a digital app. You need to live life's journey to experience that happiness.

Q. What is your greatest fear?

After three decades of a monk's life of sharing, my concern is that my physical and mental faculties should not diminish and dampen my purpose in life.
