addressed according to Ayushman Bharat guidelines). The foundation also implements village level interventions for severe and acute child malnutrition and supports children requiring paediatric care, congenital heart disease treatment, and critical medical interventions.

The outcomes underscore the policy relevance of primary care investments. Household out of pocket medical expenditure reduced by 59%, while chronic illness prevalence declined from 31% to 11.4%. Education as a Continuum Not a One Time Intervention

The Hans Foundation's education programs span the full learning cycle from pre–school to senior secondary education, reaching nearly 60,000 students across states. The foundation invests in STEM education, remedial education, career guidance, life skills development, teacher capacity building, as well as enrolment, retention, and continuation of education.

All interventions are aligned with the National Education Policy and PM SHRI guidelines, strengthening coherence with government priorities while directly addressing equity gaps faced by children from underserved communities.

Disability Inclusion Embedded in Service Design

Disability and inclusion form a core focus of the foundation's work. The Hans Foundation operates 25 Mobile Therapy Buses in collaboration with NIEPID, providing physiotherapy, occupational therapy, counselling, speech therapy, and special education services at the doorstep for persons with disabilities. The foundation's inclusive education models support participation across life stages, while specialized neuro developmental centres, including one at AIIMS Delhi, address complex clinical needs.

Signature initiatives such as cochlear implant support for children with congenital hearing deafness, and the integration of mental and physical health services in more than 30 schools across Delhi NCR reflect a shift toward holistic, rights–based inclusion.

Livelihoods and Climate Resilience Preparing for the Future Economy

Livelihood initiatives prioritize economic resilience and dignity, particularly for women and smallholder communities through various on–farm and off–farm programs. The components also include skill development, enterprise creation, vocational training, and financial literacy.

In parallel, climate action programs recognize the growing intersection between livelihoods and environmental risk. Community–led initiatives to restore water sources, prevent forest fires, and promote sustainable land use practices strengthen both ecological and economic security.

Why This Model Matters for CSR and Policy

As CSR in India evolves from compliance driven spending to strategic social investment, organizations increasingly require implementation partners capable of delivering scale, accountability, and long–term outcomes. The experience of organizations such as The Hans Foundation suggests that integrated interventions rooted in primary healthcare, inclusive education, disability focused interventions, livelihood security, and community–led climate action can contribute meaningfully to development outcomes.

For policymakers, the foundation's work provides field level evidence through its multi–thematic interventions that can shift development trajectories.

For corporate partners, it offers a credible pathway to align Environmental, Social, and Governance (ESG) commitments with measurable, socially transformative results.

In an era where equity, sustainability, and accountability define development success, The Hans Foundation's model demonstrates how CSR and the government support it received can work in closer alignment, anchored in evidence, dignity, and shared responsibility.
