A WORLD IN FLUX

A turbulent decade saw global terror, weakened states and shifting power, testing leaders, democracies and societies amid uncertainty

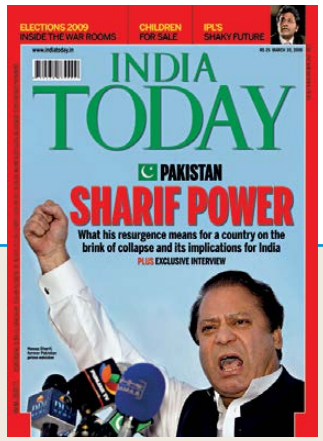

The period between 2005 and 2015 was marked by unsettled power, porous borders and nervous democracies. Terrorism globalised, states weakened from within and leadership across continents was tested by crises.

The decade opened with a jolt. The London bombings of July 2005 shattered the assumption that the West's great capitals were insulated from the violence long familiar to South Asia and the Middle East. The attacks exposed how global jihad had embedded itself within migrant societies and how the 'war on terror' was losing coherence even as its threat expanded.

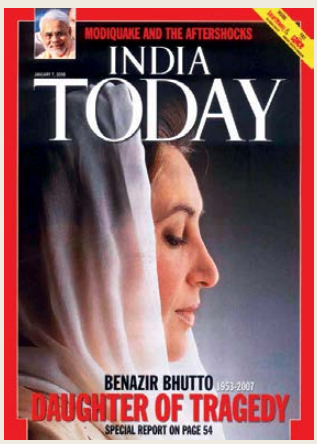

South Asia's western flank darkened. Paki-

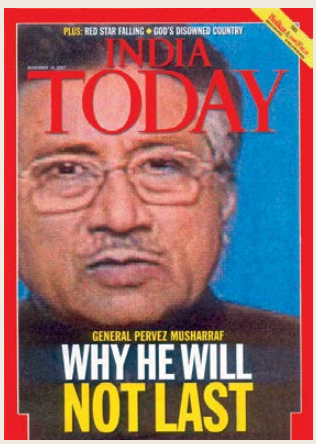

▲ Jan. 30, 2012

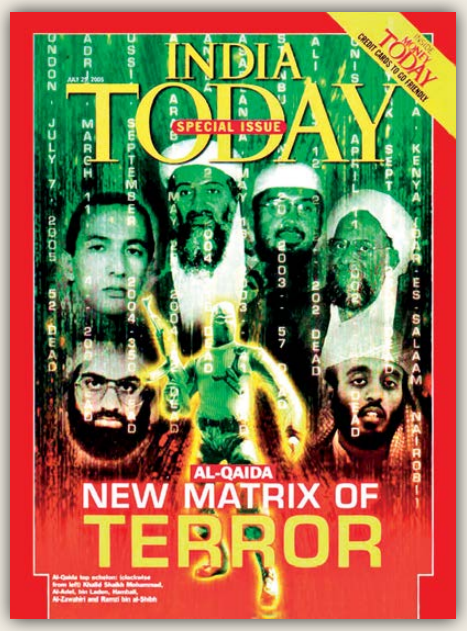

▲ Mar. 30, 2009

▲ Jan. 7, 2008

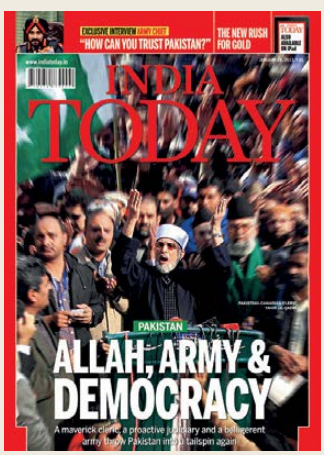

▲ Nov. 19, 2007

▲ Jul. 25, 2005

▲ May 19, 2008

▲ Jan. 28, 2013