

Shame Games
Aug. 2, 2010

"Scarcity and survival may belong to the past but jugaad is still very much an Indian obsession, as the frantic, embarrassing, shameful last-minute rush to salvage the 2010 Commonwealth Games from disaster gets underway. With just 70 days to go for the prestigious event to kick off on October 3, Delhi, the host city, meant to welcome 15,000 people, including 11,000 sportspersons and officials from 72 countries, looks like a war zone. Deadlines have long past, schedules are haywire and budgets keep expanding—it has shot up ten-fold from the estimated Rs 1,200 crore given in the Delhi bid document."

pic gold medal in shooting at the Beijing Games. Women athletes emerged as some of the decade's most powerful icons. Sania Mirza's rise brought Indian women's tennis into the global spotlight. She expanded the space available to women in Indian sport and public life. Saina Nehwal's ascent in badminton reinforced that shift; she became India's most consistent global performer in an individual sport, winning major titles and reaching the world's top rankings. Her success reflected the slow but significant emergence of institutional support systems outside cricket, particularly in academies and private training ecosystems.

The Legend of Sachin Tendulkar
Nov. 25, 2013

"'Just thought I'd let you know that I have decided to retire after the West Indies series,' Sachin said without preamble. 'I have conveyed it to BCCI.' The words did not register for a few seconds....There was an odd silence while I regained my composure. Sachin, however, was calm and composed. 'Don't get emotional,' he said. 'Anjali (his wife) and Ajit (his brother) are getting emotional. Don't portray me as a retired cricketer even before I have retired,' he laughed. 'I still have two Test matches to play and I want to play them well.'"

MANDAR DEODHAR

BLUE DAWN The Indian team celebrates the Twenty20 World Championship title against Pakistan in Johannesburg, Sept. 24, 2007

GETTY IMAGES

