

> The more we talk openly, the more we remove the fear. Cancer is curable when caught early - that's the message I repeat everywhere."
> - Dr Majid Ahmed Talikoti

He has seen cancer in every form - aggressive, silent, misunderstood - and he approaches each case with a quiet conviction: "If it's curable, I will fight for this patient."

In a medical world where most experts stay put in big urban centres, Dr Talikoti defies the pattern. His professional footprint stretches across India; from Delhi's premier hospitals to the Himalayan valley of Srinagar and the heart of Karnataka's Gulbarga.

One of the things Dr Talikoti stresses everywhere he goes is the importance of breaking myths around cancer. He often meets patients who walk in believing cancer automatically means the end of life. "I sit with them and explain that cancer is not something to fear," he says. "What is dangerous is late diagnosis, not the disease itself." In his camps and public talks, he spends time addressing misconceptions like 'cancer always spreads,' that surgery worsens it, or that treatment is unaffordable.

Charity isn't a project for him – it's the way he practices medicine

His service footprint includes:

- 150+ cancer awareness talks
- 500+ medical camps, many in underserved districts
- Thousands of free surgeries for patients who had nowhere else to turn
- Active, heartfelt support for Ayushman Bharat, which he credits for transforming access to cancer care

He tells people that early detection saves lives and that fear only delays help. "The more we talk openly, the more we remove the fear. Cancer is curable when caught early - that's the message I repeat everywhere."

"I see to it personally that every patient receives the best treatment and returns to normal life," he says adding, "If a patient is curable but can't afford treatment, I take the help of the institute I'm working with. We stand by the patient. Nobody should be denied the chance to live".

Beyond medicine: creating futures through education

Very few know that Dr Talikoti is also deeply involved in educational upliftment.

He proudly shares: "We help run four schools for underprivileged children in Daryaganj, Delhi. Education is the foundation of everything."

At home: a devoted father, a husband, and a man who rarely slows down

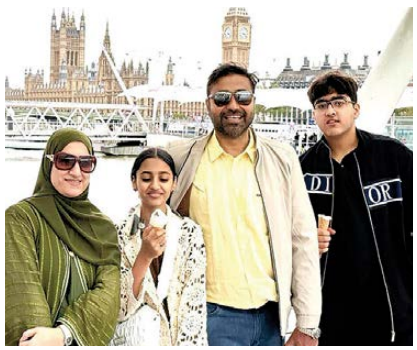

Behind the intensity of his schedule is a warm, grounded family life. Married to Prof (Dr) Jahan Ara Banday and a father of two, he tries to make the moments he gets with them count, even if they are few.

He smiles softly when talking about it.
"Yes, I'm addicted to my work. A workaholic. But every surgery teaches me something new. Seeing a family smile after a successful surgery, humbles me more than anything else."

In an era where medical achievements are often measured in technology, buildings, and awards, Dr Majid Ahmed Talikoti represents something far more meaningful. He is a surgeon who listens before he operates. A teacher who shares before he with holds. A leader who goes where he is needed, not where it is convenient.

For him, saving lives is not a profession.
It is simply the way he believes life should be lived.
