bicycles, including models such as Connect I and Connect II, as well as e-rickshaws, gym equipment and sports products. Avon also introduced its CYCLUX range to cater to customers looking for a more premium cycling experience.

Despite these changes, one principle remained unchanged. Avon's strength has always been its ability to offer value for money, making reliable products accessible without compromising on quality.

Onkar Singh Pahwa often attributes Avon's resilience to its long-standing relationships. "I believe that trust built over years with dealers, vendors, suppliers and employees creates stability that no short-term strategy can replace. Fair dealing, transparency and consistency have become the defining traits of Avon," he says.

Even today, as his sons take on executive responsibilities, Onkar Singh Pahwa continues to come to his office every day. His role has evolved from operational leadership to guidance and mentorship, but his presence remains central.

Passing the Baton to the Next Generation

The next phase of Avon's journey is being led by his sons. Rishi Pahwa, Managing Director, oversees purchases, operations and works. Mandeep Singh Pahwa, Joint Managing Director, handles sales, finance and strategic growth. Together, they are steering the company into new markets and product categories while remaining anchored to the values that built the brand.

For Pahwa, leadership succession has always been about continuity rather than control. He remains the company's thought leader, offering perspective shaped by decades of experience.
