

"This is a significant moment for our country. Yoga and Ayurveda belong to India. The world is ready, and it is our responsibility to present these sciences with dignity and depth."

Mohit Sardana

At ASLI Ayurveda, entrepreneurship and spirituality converge. For Mohit Sardana, the organisation is an extension of his spiritual sadhana and yoga—where business is rooted in discipline, inner balance, and conscious purpose.

"Today, many marketers are capitalising on the growing interest in conscious living without respecting the authenticity of ingredients or formulations," Sardana observes. "Ayurveda cannot survive as a marketing story. It must stand on truth, research and integrity."

Beyond classical Ayurveda, ASLI's manufacturing portfolio extends into nutraceuticals and herbal cosmetics, offering end-to-end solutions—from formulation and regulatory alignment to premium packaging and global-ready presentation. Each product is crafted amidst the gentle resonance of Vedic chants that flow through the premises. There is a temple within the factory grounds, and the atmosphere carries a quiet stillness.

The work culture reflects the same philosophy. "A janitor and a managing director are treated with the same respect here," he says. "Every employee works as if this is their own company." During a factory visit, one employee remarks quietly, "This is not just employment for us. We believe we are contributing to the health and wellness of people across the world."

The Inner Journey

Long before ASLI Ayurveda took shape, Sardana's journey into wellness was deeply personal. Born from an inner quest, his journey found discipline and clarity through yoga and sadhana with the Grace of his Guru - SADHGURU. Ayurveda followed naturally, emerging not as a profession but as a responsibility.

The ASLI Promise

I am not driven by valuation," Sardana says firmly. "I am driven by purpose. I do not want Ayurveda to be dismissed as superstition. My mission is to bring research and science to it, and to demonstrate its reality," he signs off.

However, the lack of integrity in the industry disturbed him. That impulse to restore dignity and integrity to science is what led to the birth of ASLI Ayurveda.

Last year, life tested Sardana again when he was diagnosed with kidney cancer. Yet his response was marked by an unshaken calm. Even after the diagnosis, he attended a concert and danced. Within days of surgery, he travelled to Prayagraj for the Mahakumbha.

At the heart of Sardana's journey is a deep sense of gratitude. "I am deeply thankful to my parents for being my strength throughout my life. My father devoted his life to shaping my destiny and my mother, for whom I remain her entire world, has been my emotional support."

He is equally mindful of the values he is passing on to the next generation. His elder son, Vibhum, is currently pursuing finance in India and follows spiritual practices alongside his education, sharing a long-term vision of building ASLI Ayurveda as a global institution. His younger son, Meerab, is a school-going national-level footballer.

His wife, Monika, remains an integral part of ASLI Ayurveda's ecosystem. Often present at the factory, she handles everyday tasks and serves as a bridge between workers and leadership.

At a Glance

- One lakh sq ft ZED Gold certified manufacturing facility at Taraori, Haryana
- Operations across 20 plus countries including the US and Europe
- Classical Ayurvedic formulations supported by modern scientific research
- In-house team of scientists, biotechnologists and pharma professionals
- Eco conscious manufacturing with strict global compliance
- Transitioning from global third party manufacturing to direct to consumer