into functional geometry." With Aurangabad's unforgiving heat, the west-facing plot demanded resilience. Ergo, the facade is conceived as a sculpture of folded planes—angular volumes that protrude and recede. Stone cladding armours select surfaces and shading comes through a breathtaking system of 1,000 hand-cut wooden lattices, their tongue-and-groove joinery creating a climate-responsive kinetic screen. Pit against pale concrete, each teak panel bears a diamond-within-grid pattern, a contemporary translation of traditional jali work that tempers the afternoon light.

Material Continuity

The entrance door, a dramatic grid of teak panels studded with metal bosses, punctuates this dynamic plane, its warm honey tones glowing against the rough-cut stone surround. Crossing the threshold, granite unfolds across the semi-open foyer's floor in an organic schema, shape shifting into seating
