Academia meets Art

Educationalist-turned-producer and actor Geetha Priya Nagpal brings vision, empathy and social commitment to every role she embraces

For Geetha Priya Nagpal, life has never followed a rigid blueprint. What began in 1985 with just seven students in a small classroom has grown into a thriving educational ecosystem of nearly 10,000 students from over 35 countries and a vibrant alumni network exceeding 85,000.

Yet, even after building one of Bengaluru's respected education groups, Krupanidhi Group of Institutions, she chose to step into an entirely new arena — cinema. Her upcoming Kannada film Aparichite, is set for release in the last week of March which addresses issues close to her heart ie contemporary social concerns with sensitivity.

Her journey in education was organic. There were no grand strategies, only commitment. Word of mouth, personal attention and a family-like atmosphere helped the institution expand steadily. Financial struggles, infrastructure hurdles and manpower shortages marked the early years, but she met them with discipline and resilience.

Equally central to her leadership has been her belief in emotional intelligence — the ability to listen, empathise and respond thoughtfully — which she considers essential in building institutions and nurturing people.
Under her guidance, Krupanidhi has grown into a comprehensive educational environment-friendly ecosystem comprising a Business School, Pharmacy College, Physiotherapy College, Nursing College, Degree College, Pre University College, Residential PU College and an International School. She believes that education must shape character as much as it builds careers.

Geetha Priya Nagpal often credits her grandmother as her greatest role model, whose quiet strength and wisdom shaped her leadership style.

After decades in education and social service, cinema entered her life unexpectedly last year — a space she embraced not for glamour, but for purpose. Cinema has reach. It can influence thought. So why not use it meaningfully? she says. As a producer, Geetha Priya Nagpal now ensures that every story aligns closely with her values. Like her debut project Thayavva, her upcoming film, Aparichite, in which she plays a lead role, too seeks to challenge conventional stereotypes and champion socially relevant storytelling.

Balancing education, cinema and family life, she credits patience, discipline and time management — qualities honed through decades in academics. Spontaneity and intuition guide her choices.

She believes women are inherently capable — natural managers, nurturers and leaders. Financial independence, she insists, is crucial for dignity and security. At the same time, she strongly argues that homemaking must be economically valued, for every contribution deserves recognition.

An MBA graduate, Geetha Priya Nagpal blends professionalism with empathy and has received several national and international awards.

From nurturing students to producing purposeful films, Geetha Priya Nagpal demonstrates that reinvention is possible at any stage, and that leadership can evolve while staying true to its core values.

Equally central to her leadership has been her belief in emotional intelligence, which she considers essential in building institutions and nurturing people.
