KIREN RIJIJU

Union Minister of Parliamentary Affairs & Minority Affairs

The first job is done, connectivity, digital, physical, moral, a heart-to-heart connection from Delhi to the Northeast. Now it's the turn of soft development to do its part

PM Modi is the only one who has gone to the root of the issue to ensure that the problems being faced by the people of Manipur will be settled and solved for ever

HARDIK CHHABRA

THE NORTHEAST TRANSFORMATION

THE SUN RISES IN THE NORTHEAST

There are no two views on the limitless possibilities within the Northeast. Unleashing that potential, though, has been a completely different matter. Discussing this and other topics germane to the Seven Sisters at the 2025 India Today Conclave was Union Minister for Parliamentary and Minority Affairs Kiren Rijiju and Sikkim chief minister Prem Singh Tamang. The session focused on the development in the region in the past decade, including the rapid strides achieved in infrastructure which has "transformed the Northeast". As Rijiju put it, "Infrastructure will unleash the potential. So, the first job is done... connectivity, digital, physical, moral, a heart-to-heart connection from Delhi to the Northeast. Now, it's the turn of soft development—education, health, tourism—to do its part. The foundation has been laid and the results will be there for everyone to see in the coming days. These 10 years of strong foundation-building will make the Northeast one of India's most vibrant regions."

The minister credited much of the success to the North-East Democratic Alliance (NEDA), which allowed regional parties to flourish rather than being overshadowed by the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP). Sikkim CM Tamang echoed the sentiment, calling the BJP his "big brother" and asserting that the Centre's support had "transformed the region from a political platform into a developmental one". Tamang also highlighted some of the upcoming projects in