Yuvraj Narayan has spent more than two decades helping DP World evolve from a collection of port businesses into an integrated global logistics giant with a footprint spanning ports, inland logistics, freight forwarding, contract logistics and digital supply chains. A chartered accountant and former chief financial officer who became Group CEO earlier this February, he leads a company operating in more than 80 countries, employing over 125,000 people and supporting the movement of more than 10% of global trade.

That scale provides the backdrop to Narayan's assessment of the global trading system. In this interview with BT in New Delhi, he describes a "broken world order", with old arrangements coming apart
