"WHY WOULD YOU NOT TAKE MY CHEQUE?"

DP World Group CEO Yuvraj Narayan says he is a willing investor with the money ready, but in India "everything gets challenged" and everybody is "constrained by process" and no replacement yet in place. As companies seek resilience rather than simply the cheapest supply chains, he expects costs to rise, and consumers to bear them. Yet, he remains convinced that globalisation is here to stay.

India occupies a key place in DP World's business. The company has plans to invest an additional $5 billion in the country, in projects at Tuna Tekra and Dadri, as well as the bids for Vadhvan port. While Narayan sees an opening for India to gain a larger share of global trade, he wonders why long-term capital is not flowing in faster. He acknowledges improvements in infrastructure and digitalisation, but is also impatient with a system in which, as he puts it, "everything gets challenged". Edited excerpts:

Q: Global trade and supply chains are being reshaped. How do you see this moment for the world economy and trade order?

A: I would say there is no order. World trade is a subset of the world order. What we are going through right now is a broken world order. We have been through is
