

Leaders

THAT WOMEN ARE scaling fresh highs in corporate India is well-known. Various surveys peg women representation at the CXO level at 20-21%, up from barely 10% a decade ago. Elsewhere, women entrepreneurs and family business owners are setting new benchmarks. A recent report by Barclays Private Bank and Encubay says women business leaders are set to inherit almost ₹73 lakh crore over the next decade. In the survey, 86% women leaders prioritise long-term wealth creation; 66% actively participate in investment management.

As women leaders—CXOs and business owners—climb the wealth ladder, managing money becomes a complex affair. It is no longer about just having an emergency fund or risk insurance cover. Larger asset sizes require smart financial solutions.

Radhika Gupta, MD & CEO, Edelweiss MF, gives a framework. "The priorities are a diversified portfolio, money you can access when needed, a retirement plan and clear arrangements for succession. Professional advice can bring investments, taxes and estate planning together. Being successful in your career does not mean you have to manage every aspect of your wealth yourself. But you should understand the plan and remain involved," she says.

Therefore, it is necessary to dwell into what senior women corporate executives and businesswomen must look for while managing their wealth in terms of investment avenues, advisors, legal angles, planning challenges and solutions.

ONE-STOP FAMILY OFFICES

For high net-worth women CXOs or family business owners, family offices offer a one-stop wealth management solution. A family office is a private advisory and wealth management entity that handles financial (investment, asset allocation, global diversification, etc),
