installed across wildlife landscapes now provide 96,000 litres of water daily in Tipeshwar Wildlife Sanctuary and 24,000 litres daily in Kolhuchaur Forest Reserve, while conservation awareness programmes have reached 84 villages, strengthening biodiversity protection and human-wildlife coexistence. These initiatives reflect a philosophy that climate resilience must begin with communities living closest to nature. With VanJeevan, the Foundation promotes human–wildlife coexistence through sustainable interventions such as solar-powered pumps, solar lights and thermal drones improving night-time safety in Pilibhit Tiger Reserve, and dedicated community support including 285 frontline staff kits and scholarships for children of Bagh Mitras and families affected by tiger attacks.

Her leadership is equally defined by compassion. Drawing upon her medical background, she has led healthcare and humanitarian initiatives that have reached over two lakh people, facilitated the distribution of 2.6 crore cooked meals, and supported more than 70,000 migrant workers and vulnerable families through relief and welfare programmes. Across rural Haryana, she has also championed integrated village development, transforming communities through education, livelihoods, healthcare and local infrastructure. Beyond philanthropy, Dr. Kanodia has consistently represented India on the global stage. Remarkably, her pursuit of excellence extends into sport. A four-time International Gold Medal-winning Kettlebell Champion representing India at global championships, she credits the discipline of elite athletics for shaping her resilience, consistency and leadership philosophy. Dr. Payal Bansal Kanodia's leadership has increasingly earned national recognition as a powerful force at the intersection of philanthropy, sustainability, and institution building. Her unwavering commitment to creating measurable social impact has been acknowledged through some of India's most distinguished honours, including the India CSR Award at the 17th India CSR Summit & Awards 2026 for M3M Foundation's transformative work in Aspirational District Nuh, Haryana. She was also recognised as the Youngest Achiever at the Times Foundation National CSR Summit 2026, underscoring the remarkable scale and maturity of her leadership at a relatively young age. Her growing influence has further been celebrated with the ET Now Champion of CSR 2025, HT City's Most Stylish Philanthropist 2025, and the SHE Shakti Award by NewsX. A rare distinction that transcends national boundaries, Dr. Kanodia is a two-time Leader of Hope awardee—India's Leader of Hope (2024) and Asia's Leader of Hope (2025)— recognising her unwavering commitment to humanitarian leadership and inclusive development. Reinforcing her stature among India's foremost change-makers, she was also named among Hurun India's Top 10 Women Philanthropists 2025. Collectively, these accolades reflect not merely personal achievement, but the growing national and international recognition of a leader whose work is quietly reshaping the discourse around responsible enterprise, women's leadership, climate action, and purpose-driven nation building.

Yet numbers and awards tell only part of the story. Dr. Kanodia's greatest contribution lies in redefining what influential leadership can look like in India. She has demonstrated that philanthropy can be strategic, that sustainability can drive development, and that empowering women and children is not simply a moral responsibility but an economic imperative. Looking ahead, her Vision 2035 is among the most ambitious social development roadmaps being driven by any corporate philanthropist in India: empowering 24 million women and girls, supporting 42 million youth through skilling and sports, enabling educational opportunities for 40 million children, strengthening one million labour and migrant families, planting 10 million trees, restoring 200 water bodies, and building climate-resilient communities across the country.
