PHOTOS BY HARDIK CHHABRA

39

and what was going to come probably in four months will now probably come in a year. But it can be sooner than that the minute the situation changes.

But right now, conservation is something that we think is prudent to do.

I think there are other areas where we are trying to improve ourselves because when you are down, that allows you to improve yourself technologically, to look at things in a better fashion when orders start coming in. We are also looking at AI interventions and better technologies as part of investments.

We have quite a lot of orders. We are unable to process them because there is no transport currently, but we are also working on that. You know, we are working with our people, with our customers in particular, and we are looking at solving these issues.

▶▶▶

What is your growth trajectory for the sector?

There is also a positive side of the whole situation for the pipeline business. Oil prices have doubled, therefore investment in pipelines will happen. It is an opportunity for us.

The countries in West Asia are looking at alternative pipelines. Till now, their only option was to use the Gulf route, and now they are looking more at the Red Sea and the Mediterranean Sea. So, in the short term, there is stress for all of us, but in the long term, we see huge benefits.

▶▶▶

What kind of policy support is needed from the government?