

PHOTOS BY AZHAR

"A general management MBA without an understanding of technology will have limited scope in the future"

▶▶▶

There are frequent questions about whether the MBA is losing relevance. Is it still the gold standard for developing business leaders?

The MBA remains a very important degree. While the traditional MBA format may evolve, the core components of management education will continue to remain valuable, including through shorter-duration programmes. At any stage of a career, whether someone is looking for a job or trying to understand markets and businesses better, knowledge of management principles is useful.

▶▶▶

How has the ideal management student changed over the past five years? What will define the ideal candidate for a management programme?

The post-internet era has changed the character of business. Technology, particularly artificial intelligence, has become foundational. In modern manufacturing facilities, automation has transformed how businesses operate. Machines are connected, processes