COMBINING LEGACY WITH REINVENTION

As NMIMS spreads its wings, the emphasis remains on making students ready for not just a career but for a life of learning, leadership and impact

ON A BUSY day, the Vice Chancellor of NMIMS Deemed-To-Be University, Sougata Ray, has squeezed in time for this meeting. The modern campus in Mumbai is a beehive of activity as Ray generously shows us around, pausing briefly occasionally to greet his students. Legacy is a word that comes up often when Ray speaks.

"We have a strong legacy of more than four-and-a-half decades, particularly in management education. But over the years, we have developed into a much broader multidisciplinary university," he says. That statement becomes clear when one realises the capabilities that exist across management, technology, engineering, law, and pharmacy, to name a few. "I see this as a transition from being a successful institution with multiple schools and campuses to becoming a truly integrated multidisciplinary university," adds Ray.

MAKING THAT DIFFERENCE

Understandably, that is one of the things that makes NMIMS unique, which, to Ray, brings forth several possibilities for students and faculty. "A narrowly focused institution may find that more difficult to create," says Ray.

Being in India's financial capital Mumbai, home to a large number of companies, puts NMIMS in a good position. "We have had a strong relationship with business but that needs to evolve. Industry
