BRICs," The Daily Telegraph, April 4, 2009; and Jim O'Neill, "We Need Brics to Build the World Economy," The Times (London), June 23, 2009. At the Gleneagles Summit in 2005, Western leaders agreed to hold a separate set of meetings with ministers from the emerging economies of China, India, Brazil, South Africa, and Mexico, then referred to as the G8+5. Russia had already been invited to participate in the renamed G8 as a status enhancement to compensate for its diminished position after the end of the Cold War and collapse of the Soviet Union.

The BRICS club also outlasted the BRICs investment portfolio, which was closed by Goldman Sachs in 2015 after its assets declined following a peak of $842 million in 2010. The BRIC Index of Morgan Stanley Capital International (MSCI) returned 308 percent in the first 10 years of the 21st century (through 2010), compared with a 15 percent gain in the Standard & Poor's 500 index. After leaving Goldman Sachs in 2013, Jim O'Neill was made a Lord and worked as a commercial minister to the U.K. Treasury in David Cameron's government.
