46. China's strategy to promote a materially strong country and a peaceful multipolar world necessitated "learning to live with the hegemon" and adjusting to the reality of U.S. dominance. Jia Qingguo, "Learning to Live with the Hegemon: Evolution of China's Policy Toward the US Since the End of the Cold War," Journal of Contemporary China 14, no. 44 (2005): 395–407.

47. Robert B. Zoellick first applied the term "responsible stakeholder" to China in "Whither China? From Membership to Responsibility," Remarks to the National Committee on U.S.-China Relations, September 21, 2005.

48. Foreign Minister Wang Yi press conference, Xinhua News Agency, Beijing, China, March 8, 2016.

49. Betts, "Institutional Imperialism"; and Michael Mastanduno, "System Maker and Privilege Taker: US Power and the International Political Economy," World Politics 61, no. 1 (2009): 121–154.

50. Eric Helleiner and Bessma Momani, "The Hidden History of China and the IMF," in The Great Wall of Money: Power and Politics in China's International Monetary Relations, ed. Eric Helleiner and Jonathan Kirshner (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 2014), 45–70.

51. Jin Renqing (former Finance Minister), speech at the World Bank/IMF Annual Meeting, September 24, 2005. By comparison, China was more quiescent in the WTO until 2008, when it joined the top table, acting initially as a veto player, rejecting U.S. demands for special concessions and additional market opening, and then cooperating with Brazil and India.Kristen Hopewell, "Different Paths to Power: The Rise of Brazil, India, and China at the World Trade Organization," Review of International Political Economy 22, no. 2 (2015): 311–338.

52. John Odling-Smee, "The IMF and Russia in the 1990s," Working Paper No. 04/155 (2004); IMF, "25 Years of Transition: Post-communist Europe and the IMF," staff paper, 2014, especially 30–32.

53. Bessma Momani, "Another Seat at the Board: Russia's IMF Executive Director," International Journal 62, no. 4 (2007): 916–939. However, Washington also gained less influence over China and Russia than over U.S. allies such as Japan and South Korea because they are not dependent on American security guarantees.

54. John Gerard Ruggie, "International Regimes, Transactions, and Change: Embedded Liberalism in the Postwar Economic Order," International Organization 36, no. 2 (1982): 379–415, at 382.

55. Ibid., 405.

56. Robert G. Gilpin, War and Change in World Politics (Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1981), 35–36.

57. Robert O. Keohane, After Hegemony: Cooperation and Discord in the World Political Economy (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2005).

58. Ren Xiao, "A Reform-Minded Status Quo Power? China, the G20, and Reform of the International Financial System," Third World Quarterly 36, no. 11 (2015): 2023–2043.

59. The sentence ends: "at least for the time being." Wang Jisi and Zhu Feng, "Conclusion: The United States, China, and World Order," in Ikenberry, Zhu, and Wang, America, China, and the Struggle for World Order, 362. Other scholars concur, observing, "although China is not completely happy with the existing international economic order, it does not seek a new type of order, rather it wants changes within [the] order." Weixing Hu, "China as a Listian Trading State: Interest, Power, and Economic Ideology," in ibid., 236. Several articles published in recent years in the authoritative Chinese journal Contemporary International Relations develop the same general line of analysis, such as articles by Wang Wenfeng, "Analysis on China's Power and International Environment," Contemporary International Relations, no. 6, 2014; Hu Shisheng, "Reflections on International Order Transition," Contemporary International Relations, no. 7, 2014; and Wu Zhicheng,