"International System in a Process of Multi-polarization," Contemporary International Relations, no. 7, 2014.

60. He adds that the only realistic alternative is global disorder and instability. Andrei Kortunov, "The Inevitable, Weird World: Prospect for the Liberal World Order," no. 4, Russia in Global Affairs (October/December 2016). See also Cynthia Roberts (ed.), "Forum: Challengers or Stakeholders? BRICs and the Liberal World Order," Polity 42, no. 1 (January 2010); and T. V. Paul (ed.), Accommodating Rising Powers (Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2016).

61. On China provoking a power transition, see John Mearsheimer, "The Rise of China Will Not be Peaceful At All," The Australian, 18, no. 11 (2005); and idem., "The Gathering Storm: China's Challenge to US Power in Asia," Chinese Journal of International Politics 3, no. 4 (2010): 381–396. See also Aaron Friedberg, A Contest for Supremacy: China, America, and the Struggle for Mastery in Asia (New York: Norton, 2012); and Martin Jacques, When China Rules the World: The End of the Western World and the Birth of a New Global Order (New York: Penguin, 2009). On power transitions theory, see Gilpin, War and Change; A. F. K. Organski and Jacek Kugler, The War Ledger (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1981); Ronald L. Tammen, et al., Power Transitions: Strategies for the 21st Century (New York: Chatham House Publishers of Seven Bridges Press, 2000).

62. Brad Setser, "China Can Now Organize Its Own (Financial) Coalitions of the Willing," Council on Foreign Relations, New York, September 18, 2016; and Joshua Kurlantzick, Charm Offensive: How China's Soft Power Is Transforming the World (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 2007).

63. Charles A. Kupchan, No One's World: The West, the Rising Rest, and the Coming Global Turn (New York: Oxford University Press, 2012); Ian Bremmer, Every Nation for Itself: Winners and Losers in a G-Zero World (New York: Penguin, 2012); and Stewart Patrick, "Irresponsible Stakeholders? The Difficulties of Integrating Rising Powers," Foreign Affairs 89, no. 6 (November–December 2010): 44–53.

64. Joseph S. Nye, The Future of Power (New York: PublicAffairs, 2011); and Robert Jervis, The Meaning of Nuclear Revolution: Statecraft and the Prospect of Armageddon (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1989).

65. Notwithstanding its forcible annexation of Crimea, Russia has been retreating, not expanding, from its past imperial and Soviet positions, and is in a long-term struggle with the classic gap between its Great Power ambitions and actual resources.

66. See especially Randall W. Stone, Controlling Institutions: International Organizations and the Global Economy (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2011); and Mastanduno, "System Maker and Privilege Taker."

67. Axel Dreher, Jan-Egbert Sturm, and James R. Vreeland, "Global Horse Trading: IMF Loans for Votes in the United Nations Security Council," European Economic Review 53, no. 7 (2009): 742–757; and Ilyana Kuziemko and Eric Werker, "How Much Is a Seat on the Security Council Worth? Foreign Aid and Bribery at the United Nations," Journal of Political Economy 114, no. 5 (2006): 905–930.

68. Throughout this period, Japan remained a loyal client of the hegemon despite some domestic resistance. Shintaro Ishihara, The Japan That Can Say No: Why Japan Will Be First Among Equals (New York: Simon & Schuster, 1991); Kent E. Calder, "Japanese Foreign Economic Policy Formation: Explaining the Reactive State," World Politics 40, no. 4 (1988): 517–541; and Saori N. Katada, "Two Aid Hegemons: Japanese-US Interaction and Aid Allocation to Latin America and the Caribbean," World Development 25, no. 6 (1997): 931–945.

69. Tonya L. Putnam, "Courts without Borders: Domestic Sources of US Extraterritoriality in the Regulatory Sphere," International Organization 63, no. 3 (July 2009): 459–490; and Martin Gilman,