17. Bachrach and Baratz termed this the “second face” of power. See Peter Bachrach and Morton S. Baratz, “Two Faces of Power,” American Political Science Review 56, no. 4 (1962): 947–952.

18. Strange, States and Markets, 88.

19. Zeev Maoz, Networks of Nations: The Evolution, Structure, and Impact of International Networks, 1816–2001 (Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2011); Thomas Oatley, W. Kindred Winecoff, Andrew Pennock, and Sarah Baerle Danzman, “The Political Economy of Global Finance: A Network Model,” Perspectives on Politics 11, no. 1 (March 2013): 133–166.

20. Robert Gilpin, War and Change in World Politics (Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1981).

21. Michael Mastanduno, “System Maker and Privilege Taker,” World Politics 61, no. 1 (January 2009): 121–154; Eric Helleiner and Jonathan Kirshner, “The Politics of China’s International Monetary Relations,” in The Great Wall of Money: Power and Politics in China’s International Monetary Relations, ed. Eric Helleiner and Jonathan Kirshner (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 2014), 8; and Gilpin, War and Change.

22. On Darwinian competition among currencies, see Cohen, Currency Power, 9, 11, 14.

23. The critiques usually target Waltz and Mearsheimer for emphasizing relative material capabilities, but these two are the most widely read and cited texts in international relations. Kenneth N. Waltz, Theory of International Politics (New York: McGraw Hill, 1979) and John Mearsheimer, The Tragedy of Great Power Politics (New York: W.W. Norton, 2001).

24. G. John Ikenberry, Michael Mastanduno, and William C. Wohlforth, “Introduction: Unipolarity, State Behavior, and Systemic Consequences,” World Politics, 61, no. 1 (January 2009): 1–27.

25. Scholars and foreign policy analysts also make such calculations. See, for example, Robert J. Lieber, Power and Willpower in the American Future: Why the United States Is Not Destined to Decline (Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2012); Carla Norrlof, “Dollar Hegemony: A Power Analysis,” Review of International Political Economy 21, no. 5 (April 2014): 1042–1070. For Chinese perspectives, see Yan Xuedong, “Why a Bipolar World Is More Likely than a Unipolar or a Multipolar One,” New Perspectives Quarterly 32 (2015): 52–56; idem., “Power Shift and Change in the International System,” and China 2020 Research Team, “Repositioning China in 2020,” both in The World in 2020 According to China: Chinese Foreign Policy Elites Discuss Emerging Trends in International Politics, ed. Shao Binhong (Leiden, Netherlands: Brill, 2014), chaps. 5 and 7, respectively.

26. International Monetary Fund (IMF), World Economic Outlook database; International Monetary Fund, World Economic Outlook: Gaining Momentum? Washington, DC, April 2017; Stephen S. Roach, “Global Growth—Still Made in China by Stephen S. Roach—Project Syndicate, August 29, 2016. Roach’s estimates predate the IMF’s revised 2016 forecast of lower U.S. growth.

27. U.S. National Intelligence Council (NIC), Global Trends 2025: A Transformed World (Washington, DC: U.S. Government Printing Office, 2008), iv–vii; and Global Trends 2030: Alternative Worlds (Washington, DC, U.S. Government Printing Office, 2012), 15.

28. Richard Dobbs et al., Urban World: Cities and the Rise of the Consuming Class, McKinsey Global Institute (MGI), 2012.

29. For example, Bruce Jones, Still Ours to Lead: America, Rising Powers, and the Tension Between Rivalry and Restraint (Washington, DC: Brookings Institution Press, 2014).

30. EU-28 figures here include the United Kingdom. After Brexit (the United Kingdom's planned withdrawal from the European Union), the EU will rank even lower in relative power rankings, as Britain accounted for 17.5 percent of the EU economy in 2015, a figure projected to decline in out years.