42. Wang Ying and Li Jiguang. “G20 yǔ zhōngguó (G20 and China),” Contemporary International Relations 22, no. 4 (July/August 2012): 44–49, http://www.cicir.ac.cn/chinese/Article_3930.html.

43. Grieco first theorized a “neorealist voice opportunities hypothesis” in the formation of the European Union. Joseph M. Grieco, “State Interests and Institutional Rule Trajectories: A Neorealist Interpretation of the Maastricht Treaty and European Economic and Monetary Union,” Security Studies 5, no. 3 (1996): 261–306. Of course, China and Russia would prefer to keep their incumbent status in the United Nations by opposing the UN Security Council (UNSC) expansion; hence, they are not genuinely “democratic” players in the international system, either.

44. Even though China was invited to join the G7/G8 Summit as early as the early 2000s, it declined, as it was uncomfortable being identified as joining the group of rich Western powers, which is against its self-identification as a developing country and its fundamental foreign policy principles. Ren Xiao, “A Reform-Minded Status Quo Power? China, the G20, and Reform of the International Financial System,” Third World Quarterly 36, no. 11 (2015): 2023–2043.

45. For example, Injoo Sohn, “Asian Financial Cooperation: The Problem of Legitimacy in Global Financial Governance,” *Global Governance: A Review of Multilateralism and International Organizat*ions 11, no. 4 (2005): 487–504.

46. Katharina Gnath and Claudia Schmucker, “The Role of the Emerging Countries in the G20: Agenda-Setter, Veto Player, or Spectator?” European Yearbook of International Economic Law (Berlin and Heidelberg: Springer, 2012), 667–681.

47. Gregory Chin, “The Emerging Countries and China in the G20: Reshaping Global Economic Governance,” Studia Diplomatica 63, no. 2 (2010): 105–123.

48. IMF quota reform was finally agreed upon at Gyeongju, Korea, during the G-20 finance ministers and central bank governors meeting in October 2010, prior to the Seoul G20 Summit in November.

49. Injoo Sohn, “Learning to Co-operate: China’s Multilateral Approach to Asian Financial Co-operation,” China Quarterly 194 (2008): 309–326.

50. Gottwald and Bersick argue that China was not fully ready for the challenge in 2008, as evidenced by then-president Hu Jintao’s speeches at the G20 Washington Summit, which were devoid of specifics. Jörn-Carsten Gottwald and Sebastian Bersick, “The Domestic Sources of China’s New Role in Reforming Global Capitalism,” International Politics 52, no. 6 (2015): 785.

51. Evan S. Medeiros, “Is Beijing Ready for Global Leadership?” Current History 108, no. 719 (2009): 252.

52. The term pengsha literally means “killing with praise.” Wang Yong and Louis Pauly, “Chinese IPE Debates on (American) Hegemony,” Review of International Political Economy 20, no. 6 (2013): 1181–1182, citing Yuan Li in “G2 gainian shi zai pengsha zhongguo (The Concept of G2 is to Flatter and Destroy China),” Guoji jinrong bao (International Financial News), June 11, 2009, 6. The same concern is reported by Shambaugh as “a dangerous trap aimed at tying China down, burning up its resources, and retarding its growth.” David Shambaugh, “Coping with a Conflicted China,” Washington Quarterly 34, no. 1 (2011): 13. Also see Thomas J. Christensen, The China Challenge: Shaping the Choices of a Rising Power (New York: W.W. Norton, 2015), 118–120.

53. Pan Wei, “Western System Versus Chinese System,” Paper No. 61, China Policy Institute, University of Nottingham, Nottingham, UK (July 2010).

54. Benjamin J. Cohen, “The International Monetary System: Diffusion and Ambiguity,” International Affairs 84, no. 3 (2008): 456.

55. Chin, “China’s Rising Monetary Power.”

56. Robert B. Zoellick, “Whither China: From Membership to Responsibility?” NBR Analysis 16, no. 4 (2005): 5.