76. For example, Chinese nationals constitute only 1.5 percent of high ranking (B01-05) staff in the IMF much lower than its (low) prereform voting quota of 3.81 percent. IMF, IMF Diversity Annual Report, 2014.

77. Michael A. Glosny, "China and the BRICs: A Real (but Limited) Partnership in a Unipolar World," Polity 42, no. 1 (2010): 112.

78. Cheng, "China's Approach to BRICS," 373.

79. A large part of the funding sources for the banks in the future will come from them issuing bonds in the capital market. In order for these banks to acquire high credit rating (hence the lower cost of raising money), the banks have to have high-quality governance and a lending portfolio.

80. The "Chinese Dream" embodies much more than these elements, which is beyond the scope of the discussion here. For information on what the Chinese Dream means to the Chinese public, see David S. G. Goodman, "Middle Class China: Dreams and Aspirations," Journal of Chinese Political Science 19, no. 1 (2014): 49–67.

81. Zhu defines "performance legitimacy" as the government's reliance of its legitimacy on its accomplishment of concrete goals, including economic growth, social stability, increase in national power, and government's competence and accountability. Yuchao Zhu, "'Performance Legitimacy' and China's Political Adaptation Strategy," Journal of Chinese Political Science 16, no. 2 (2011): 123–140.

82. Breslin, "China and the Global Order," 623.

83. Kejin Zhao and Xin Gao, "Pursuing the Chinese Dream: Institutional Changes of Chinese Diplomacy Under President Xi Jinping," China Quarterly of International Strategic Studies 1, no. 1 (2015): 35–57.

84. Hong Yousheng and Fang Quin, "Global Economic Governance Power Shift: The G20 and Strategies," Contemporary International Relations 22, no. 3 (2012): 38–46, http://www.cicir.ac.cn/chinese/Article_3714.html.

85. Yongnian Zheng, Rongfang Pan, and P. D. D'Costa, "From Defensive to Aggressive Strategies: The Evolution of Economic Nationalism in China," Globalization and Economic Nationalism in Asia (2012): 84; Mattias Vermeiren, "Foreign Exchange Accumulation and the Entrapment of Chinese Monetary Power: Towards a Balanced Growth Regime?" New Political Economy 18, no. 5 (2013): 680–714.

86. Yang Jiang, "The Limits of China's Monetary Diplomacy," in The Great Wall of Money, 165.

87. Such challenges include the publication of multiple books surrounding the "currency wars," for example.

88. Suisheng Zhao, "Chinese Foreign Policy Under Hu Jintao: The Struggle Between Low-Profile Policy and Diplomatic Activism," The Hague Journal of Diplomacy 5, no. 4 (2010): 357–378.

89. Ulrich Volz, "All Politics Is Local: The Renminbi's Prospects as a Future Global Currency," in Financial Statecraft of Emerging Powers: Shield and Sword in Asia and Latin America, ed. Leslie Elliott Armijo and Saori N. Katada (New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2014), 103–137. Tsugami characterizes this process as the "sublimation" of Chinese nationalism in a positive direction. In psychology, the term sublimation refers to a mature type of defense mechanism where socially unacceptable impulses are transformed into socially acceptable actions or behavior. Toshiya Tsugami, Kyoryu no Kutou: Chugoku, GDP sekai ichii no gensou (Tokyo: Kadokawa Shinsho, 2015), 180–181.

90. Suisheng Zhao, "Foreign Policy Implications of Chinese Nationalism Revisited: The Strident Turn," Journal of Contemporary China 22, no. 82 (2013): 539.

91. Yang, "The Limits of China's Monetary Diplomacy," 160.