266. Francis A. Korengay, Jr., “South Africa, the Indian Ocean, and the IBSA-BRICS Equation: Reflections on Geopolitical and Geostrategic Dimensions” (Observer Research Foundation, New Delhi, 2011).

267. Elizabeth Sidiropoulus, “Modi’s African Safari,” South African Institute of International Affairs, July 4, 2016, http://www.saiia.org.za/. In his July 2016 visit to five African countries, including South Africa, Prime Minister Modi tried to convince President Zuma’s government to take India’s side in its bid to join the Nuclear Suppliers’ Club, despite it not adhering to the Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT). This bid was supported by most UNSC members, including the United States, but China opposed it. South Africa has demurred.

268. In South Africa, as in Brazil and to a lesser extent in India, the BRICS club is almost always conceptualized as constituting links among the Global South.

269. Janis van der Westhuizen, “Class Compromise as Middle Power Activism? Comparing Brazil and South Africa,” Government and Opposition 48, no. 1 (January 2013): 80–100.

270. South African news reports were remarkably silent on the “BRICS leaders–Africa Dialogue Forum” retreat held on March 27, 2013, in Durban, noting only that “African leaders” had met with Xi. Only the Chinese Foreign Ministry saw fit to publish the actual list of attendees. See Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the PRC, “President Xi Jinping Attends BRICS Leaders–Africa Dialogue Forum, Calling for the Building of Partnership for a Better Future,” Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People’s Republic of China, March 28, 2013.

271. Pascal Fletcher, “BRICS ‘Big Five’ Find It Hard to Run as a Herd,” Reuters, March 27, 2013.

272. See, for example, the editorial in Business Day, “Brics Reflects a Changing World,” July 17, 2014; and Mzukisi Qobo and Mills Soko, “The Rise of Development Finance Institutions: South Africa, BRICS, and Regional Strategy” (South African Institute of International Affairs, Johannesburg, 2015), 3–4.

273. Hillary Joffe, “Forget the Brics Aspirations, Try Exporting Instead,” Business Day, July 16, 2014.

274. This is from the online blurb introducing a set of research papers from the South African Institute of International Affairs (SAIIA). See Memory Dube, “Collection: South Africa Beyond the BRICS,” South African Institute of International Affairs, April 20, 2015, http://www.saiia.org.za/.

275. Sanusha Naidu, “South Africa and FOCAC: Enabling a Partnership for Global Economic Governance Beyond the BRICS?” (South African Institute of International Affairs, Johannesburg, October 2015); Elizabeth Sidiropoulos and Chris Alden, “Modi’s New Foreign Policy Agenda and the Implications for Africa” (South African Institute of International Affairs, Johannesburg, January 2016).

276. Thebe Mabanga, “What Brics Can Do for South Africa and Africa,” Mail and Guardian, July 7, 2015.

277. Jamie Smyth, “South Africa Warns of Cracks in Landmark Bali Trade Agreement,” Financial Times, July 20, 2014.

278. South Africa’s relatively benign view of the Bretton Woods institutions may stem partly from the fact that it is overrepresented in the IMF rather than underrepresented (see Chap. 3).

279. See David Pilling, “Lunch with the FT: Julius Malema,” Financial Times, February 5, 2016.

280. Stella Mapenzauswa, “African Powers Back Okonjo-Iweala for World Bank Position,” Business Day, March 23, 2012.

281. Linda Ensore, “Call for BRICS Not to Rely on IMF Funds,” Business Day Live, April 30, 2015.

282. Mackensie Weinger, “Nene and the Rand Take a Tumble,” Financial Times, December 10, 2015.