SACRED IMAGERY FROM ACROSS INDIA MAKES ITS WAY INTO TWO EXHIBITIONS AT DELHI'S BIKANER HOUSE

Two parallel exhibitions in the capital celebrate India's devotional visual traditions. Curated by noted designer and cultural patron Raseel Gujral Ansal, Dakhin | Dilli – A Sacred Dialogue and Prints of Divine explore the depth and diversity of sacred imagery across the Indian subcontinent, bringing together artworks spanning regions, traditions and centuries.

With its presentation of temple icons, narrative paintings and ritual objects, Dakhin | Dilli – A Sacred Dialogue explores the artistic and spiritual connections between the Deccan and north India, offering a compelling insight into the shared and evolving visual language of devotion. "Through Pichwai paintings of the North the gold-leafed, icon-centric traditions of Tanjore and Mysore from the South and the inclusion of oleographs, the exhibition traces how devotion travels across mediums and audiences," says Gujral. "While the North often unfolds through narrative and seasonal storytelling, and the South through still, sanctified icons, oleographs introduce a third dimension by democratising the sacred image, allowing it to enter homes and everyday life beyond temple and court."

Raja Ravi Varma's 'Vasantika' on display at Prints of Divine

The parallel exhibition, Prints of Divine, celebrates the revolutionary role of early Indian lithographic prints, particularly those associated with the legendary Raja Ravi Varma Press. Curated from the distinguished private collection of Delhi-based collector Prem Kandwal, the exhibition brings together 21 rare oleographs and devotional prints that illuminate the evolution of India's print culture in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The exhibition also features works by prominent artists, including M.V. Dhurandhar, K.S. Siddalingaswamy and G.V. Venkatesh Rao. ■

Through the Artist's Eye

This solo exhibition by British artist Stuart Robertson was developed during an 18-month residency at Dr. Shroff's Charity Eye Hospital in Delhi. Working across photography, drawing, bronze sculpture and cyanotype, Robertson reflects on sight as both a medical and perceptual experience.
