

SCULPTURAL INDULGENCE

More than functional furniture, these bars are designed as statement pieces. The Gold Foil Bar (above) combines clean lines with champagne-gold finishes, hand-finished brass details, and a carefully selected marble top, creating a look that feels both refined and understated. Compact in scale yet visually striking, it works as practical storage while adding warmth and sophistication to the interiors.

The Tango Bar, on the other hand, takes inspiration from movement and rhythm, with soft folds replacing rigid lines to create a form that feels fluid and almost alive. Brass, Saint Laurent stone, and stained oak veneer come together in a material palette that balances richness and warmth. Crafted through custom metalwork and detailed finishing, it functions both as a bar and a statement piece. Together, the two designs from KOKO by K2 India reflect co-founder and creative director Kohelika Kohli's approach to creating objects that go beyond utility—pieces that shape the mood of a room through texture, light, and craftsmanship.

WHEN A BAR BECOMES ART

A sleek black fluted façade meets hammered metal detailing for a look that's unmistakably modern. The Noir Wave home bar from the House of Lalittya is luxury reimagined. The mirrored back wall doesn't just reflect but it amplifies, bouncing light off glassware and creating depth where there wasn't any before. The metallic arch frame anchors the piece without overwhelming it while glass shelves on metal frames keep things light and open.

"We wanted something fluid yet structured, bold without being loud. The play between reflection, texture and form is what makes it special. It's functional art, designed to celebrate craft and material in equal measure," says Shivani Gupta Mittal, principal designer, House of Lalittya.

High-gloss metal, rippled sheets, black PU with a mirror finish, and reflective glass layer together create texture and contrast. Built for entertaining, evening cocktails, or elevating the everyday, it's custommade to lift your space.
