

THE IMPERIAL, NEW DELHI

The Patiala Peg Bar & The Spirits Experience at Spice Route

The 120ml Ritual—A royal legacy, still alive on Janpath; there is only one place in the world where you can order the Patiala Peg as it was always meant to be served—a full 120 millilitres, unhurried, aristocratic, and freighted with legend. That place is The Imperial, New Delhi. And if you have never been, summer 2026 is your invitation.

But The Imperial's spirited offering does not stop at the bar. Adjacent, lies The Spice Route, and this summer it has unveiled an immersive Spirits Experience that is almost impossible to categorise simply.

The cuisine draws from the ancient spice trade routes connecting East Asia, the islands of Java, and the coasts of southern India. The journey unfolds course by course, each spirit chosen to amplify rather than compete. A Bourbon whiskey accompanies the appetisers—its vanilla warmth a natural companion to a Flaky Wild Mushroom Puff or the richness of a Flaky Duck Handbag. A botanical Gin then arrives alongside Crispy Pulled Jackfruit or Satay Ayam, its herbal brightness cutting through the char and spice. The interlude brings Japanese Whisky—and here the pairing reaches its most refined with the delicate minerality of the whisky in conversation with Silken Tofu in Black Pepper Sauce, or the deeply umami Gindara Miso Cod, silken on the palate, extraordinary in the glass. The mains — Massaman Vegetable, Nadan Chicken Curry, Mutton Saalna are met with an American Whiskey, built for the slow pleasure of a shared table. And the close: Cognac with Sticky Banana Cake, a pairing that requires no explanation beyond the first taste.
