Adrift Keya—A new cocktail programme where Japanese bar discipline meets flavours from the Silk Route

This progressive cocktail narrative traces flavour profiles from Edo-period Japan, across the Silk Route, and into India. It is curated as a chaptered journey from clarity to density, the menu utilises advanced techniques like fat-washing, broth clarification, and fermentation to reframe regional Indian ingredients such as jaggery, buransh, pickle, and kahwa. While Sunstone Negroni, integrates Japanese gin with apricot and saffron, and Silk Root, which foregrounds carrot through Tepache; in the Himalayan chapter, the menu shifts toward reduction and restoration, with Garhwal Snow using buransh, honey, and herbs, and Valley of Gold drawing on kahwa, saffron, and almond. The final chapter lands in Delhi, where drinks such as The Red Fort Old Fashioned and Dilli 6 Spritz translate jaggery, pickle, and spice into structured, high-definition formats. As India's cocktail ecosystem matures, this menu represents a conscious move toward international calibration with local maximalism.
