

Principal Architect

SUNIL BANSAL

The BJP national general secretary revived the party's rebuilding exercise after the disappointing 2024 Lok Sabha results in Bengal. He worked closely with grassroots workers linked to the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS) and designed the five-zone electoral segmentation model covering North Bengal, Jangalmahal, South Bengal, the Southwestern Border Belt and the Western Belt

Churn-maker

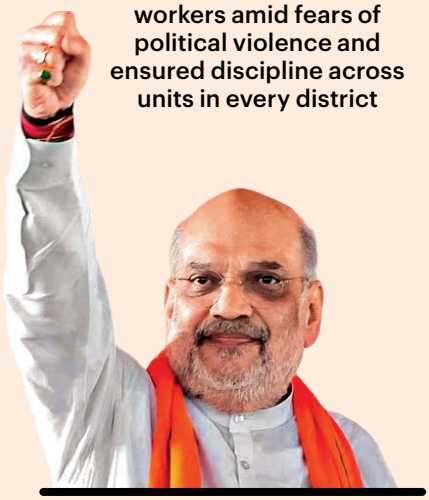

BHUPENDER YADAV

The Union environment minister was responsible for the intricacies of how to convey welfare promises to the masses, ensuring inter-ministerial alignment on the same, helping translate policy into electoral advantage

Commander-in-Chief

AMIT SHAH

The Union home minister personally spent two weeks in the state at the campaign's peak, distilling it into issue-based rhetoric. He also reassured cadre workers amid fears of political violence and ensured discipline across units in every district

Principal Coordinator

MANGAL PANDEY

Bihar minister Pandey served as the coordination backbone of the campaign, managing state-to-centre communication and aligning district-level reporting across Bengal's fragmented political geography

The Doer

SAMIK BHATTACHARYA

The BJP state president played a crucial role in this recent victory, drawing from his experience of heading the state unit. He was tasked with reconnecting with old cadres and unifying factions within the party

The Backbone

ALOK KUMAR

The joint general secretary of the RSS coordinated programmes such as Vishwa Hindu Parishad's Sant Pravas and initiatives of the Bharatiya Mazdoor Sangh, Vanvasi Kalyan Ashram and Sahakar Bharati, among others, to build ideological churn on the ground

The Challenger

SUVENDU ADHIKARI

The Leader of the Opposition in Bengal functioned as a high-voltage political disruptor, directly challenging Didi in her stronghold, Bhabanipur, and sustaining the perception of a tight contest each not as an administrative unit but as a self-contained battlefield. Spread across 294 constituencies, these booths averaged about 260-270 per seat. BJP planners mapped each one using election data from 2019, 2021 and 2024 to create a constantly updated grid of political behaviour. The party then categorised the 294 constituencies according to winnability. Around 70 were designated Category A+ and another 100 as Category A, where victory prospects were considered high. The remaining constituencies were placed in Categories B, C and D. Campaign resources were allocated accordingly, with Category A and A+ seats receiving maximum attention in terms of manpower and finances.

Sunil Bansal's membership drive proved to be an exercise in organisational layering. It helped create a middle tier of accountable grassroots leadership

Handouts and Hindutva

At the apex stood Modi, the campaign's chief force multiplier. His appeal among women, Scheduled Castes and tribal communities—amplified by the narrative of direct benefit transfers and governance delivery—allowed the BJP to reframe the contest as one of delivery versus distribution, efficiency versus patronage. Alongside, the party adopted a twin-track strategy of Hindu consolidation and minority vote fragmentation. With Muslims accounting for nearly 30 per cent of Bengal's population and forming Mamata's most reliable support base, 'consolidating the Hindu vote' became
