After a hiatus of 4 years, the Mercedes-Benz V-Class has made a return, ready to challenge the monopoly that the Japanese have enjoyed in this space for the last few years. It has been brought here exclusively in the extra-long wheelbase configuration, which measures 3,430mm. The V-Class features AMG Line cosmetic bits, including the grille pattern, and the bumper design, giving this a rather sporty theme. Customers can opt for either black or beige leather themes for the interior, which is offered with a six-seat configuration, that can be customised, with the full-lazyboy seats placed at the end, and the ventilated seats placed facing rearward, or a regular configuration, or removing a row altogether. The lazyboy seats feature 3-stage ventilation, massage, calf support, cupholders and wireless charging, while the third row features ventilation as well. The van features an Airmatic air suspension featuring adaptive damping as standard, which has been tuned for Indian road conditions. Features include a 650W 15-speaker Burmester audio system, electrically sliding doors, ambient lighting, to name a few. The V300d comes with a 2.0-litre diesel making 233bhp while the V300 gets a petrol motor making 228bhp, and also benefits from a mild-hybrid setup.
