I've always found that the quickest way to sate the soul is through the stomach; a gospel truth I discovered while scouring local street markets. Sometimes, if you're lucky, the ultimate culinary passport could actually turn out to be your own hotel. In order to better your odds of discovering these perfect culinary adventures adjacent residence, here is a list of our favourites. Imagine hand-picking herbs at a sun-drenched Balinese farm before watching the chef transform them into art on a plate. Or learning Michelin worthy pasta secrets in the rolling hills outside Turin. Luxury foodie hotels are destinations in themselves: Think chef-led cooking classes in Girona, dining on freshly-plucked produce from on-site farms, or pairing rare wines at properties that double as vineyards. This is gourmet globetrotting 101.
