DOUBLE-ENGINE GOVERNMENT: TU

Under the momentum of a double-engine government, Uttar Pradesh is racing ahead on the 'expressway' of rapid development. Guided by Prime Minister Narendra Modi and led by Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath, the state is opening new avenues of employment for youth, empowering women towards self-reliance, and enhancing farmers' incomes. Through robust schemes, progressive infrastructure, and decisive digital initiatives, an inclusive model of development has taken firm shape offering every section of society both direction and a dependable foundation for their aspirations.

What unfolded in Uttar Pradesh on April 26, 2026, was not merely a ceremonial government event it marked a defining moment in the history of India's policing system. The simultaneous passing-out parade of 60,244 police constables, conducted across 112 training centres, set a remarkable record. Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath reviewed the parade, calling it a decisive step towards strengthening law and order. This large-scale and widely discussed recruitment drive has added a new dimension to governance in the state.

Scale, scrutiny, and systemic strength

The process began with an advertisement issued on December 23, 2023, inviting applications for 60,244 constable posts. What might have appeared routine soon turned extraordinary when over 48,17,441 candidates applied transforming the exercise into one of unprecedented scale and scrutiny. Managing such magnitude demanded meticulous planning and multi-layered monitoring. A comprehensive standard operating procedure (SOP) was introduced, encompassing secure question paper handling, strict surveillance at examination centres, digital tracking, and rigorous verification protocols. Real-time monitoring and reinforced security ensured minimal scope for malpractice. Despite the inherent challenges of such a vast exercise, the process remained largely smooth and controversy-free, reflecting a clear administrative priority on fairness and transparency. On June 15, 2025, Union Home Minister Amit Shah distributed appointment letters to selected candidates in Lucknow, signalling the seriousness with which the recruitment was undertaken. Training commenced on July 21, 2025, introducing yet another challenge training tens of thousands simultaneously.

Marked transformation in training effectiveness

Before 2017, the Uttar Pradesh Police had a training capacity of around 3,000 personnel. Training over 60,000 recruits at once would have seemed improbable. However, sustained investments in infrastructure and institutional capacity transformed this limitation into a landmark achievement. With new centres established, older facilities modernised, and resources significantly expanded, training was conducted simultaneously across 112 centres. More importantly, the approach itself evolved from traditional drills and weapon handling to a curriculum aligned with contemporary policing needs. Training modules now include cybercrime prevention, digital data management, forensic science, scientific crime scene investigation, social policing, and disaster management. Recruits are trained to preserve evidence, document crime scenes through photography and videography, and record findings on digital platforms. Familiarity with systems like the Crime and Criminal Tracking Network enables data-driven policing making investigations more precise, professional, and prosecution-ready. This shift reflects a broader transition: from force-centric policing to technology-enabled, evidence-based enforcement.

A new narrative of women's empowerment

A significant highlight of this recruitment drive is the growing participation of women. Of the total recruits, over 12,048 are women underscoring a conscious push towards gender balance. While the number of women in the UP Police stood at around 10,000 between 1947 and 2017, it has now
