> Every woman in Uttar Pradesh is steadily moving towards self-reliance. When the government stands with destitute women, it creates a model of empowerment. Today, nearly 36 to 37 percent of women in the state are actively engaged across sectors. This, in itself, is the strongest model of women's safety."
>
> Yogi Adityanath
> Chief Minister, Uttar Pradesh

Social security and health: care with continuity

For destitute and widowed women, the pension scheme has become a pillar of support. The enhancement of the pension amount to ₹1,500 per month has provided consistent financial relief, benefiting over four million women more than double earlier figures. Direct transfers into bank accounts ensure transparency while reinforcing financial independence. Health initiatives have also been strengthened. Under supplementary nutrition programmes, essential nutritional support has reached millions of beneficiaries. Focused efforts on maternal and child health, combined with a strengthened Aanganwadi network and awareness campaigns, are contributing to improved outcomes and a gradual reduction in maternal and infant mortality rates.

Workplace Engagement: Participation and progress

Women's participation is no longer confined to domestic spaces or micro-enterprises. Progressive industrial policies such as permitting women to work in night shifts with ensured safety measures have opened new avenues of employment. The results are visible: female workforce participation in the state has risen from 13 percent to nearly 36 percent, marking a significant structural shift. Additionally, schemes like the PM SVANidhi Yojana have enabled women to start small businesses, reinforcing pathways to self-reliance. Viewed in totality, women's empowerment in Uttar Pradesh has advanced in a multi-dimensional manner. On one hand, economic initiatives are fostering financial independence; on the other, safety and social welfare measures are instilling confidence. Interventions in education and healthcare are laying a strong foundation for future generations.

"Sabal Naari, Pragati Hamari" is no longer merely a slogan it is steadily taking shape as a lived reality. From villages to cities, women are no longer just beneficiaries of development; they are emerging as active partners in progress.

