

HONOURABLE MENTIONS

A look at three new spaces in Delhi where the fashion designers turned into very involved interior designers to get the right look

- Layered Approach The interiors of Anmol Singh's Banjara Trail in Delhi's Vasant Kunj feel like stumbling upon a luxury caravan mid-trip, minimalist and airy, yet filled with layered prints and antique motifs. It's a space, designed by Singh, where you're actually encouraged to sit down in a warm lounge area and feel the fabric. Singh notes that their philosophy "centres on intention, emotional resonance and meticulous detail," creating a vibe that balances "maximalist storytelling".
- Arch of the Matter In Delhi's Dhan Mill, Jigar & Nikita (image: above) have traded the usual cluttered bridal racks for stately arched passages and a serene, high-ceilinged sanctuary. Designed by the founders, the layout uses a neutral palette and clever lighting to elevate the shopping. According to the founders, "Once you are at the Delhi store, you can truly feel the vibrancy and spirit of everything involved in a wedding."
- Threshold Reimagined Located in Delhi's Chattarpur, Dhruv Kapoor's debut flagship store (image: left) fuses raw marble and soft, monumental forms with custom sound and scentscapes, offering a sensory, lived-in environment that bridges memory and modernity. "The flagship is conceived as a living environment rather than a store. Every element, from material to light to sound is precisely tuned to exist in balance," says Kapoor.
