

CREATIVE SYNERGY
Shantanu and Nikhil Mehra with Hardesh and Monica Chawla (below left); interiors of the new store (left and bottom left)

The Red-Carpet Boudoir

Move over, boys. After decades of redefining menswear, Shantnu & Nikhil have finally given women their own playground. Their first standalone womenswear flagship at The Dhan Mill, Delhi, replaces the stiff retail vibe with a private couture suite. Designed by Essentia Home, the salon features a striking bed and an expansive wardrobe, inviting guests to linger and lounge. "We wanted a world where glamour feels natural, not performative," says Nikhil Mehra. The result? A sanctuary of corseted silhouettes and crystal-studded drapes that feel as bold as they are fluid.

Evidently, modern Indian retail is shifting from simple commerce to immersive storytelling, where flagship stores serve as architectural sanctuaries that boldly blur the lines between fashion, heritage and art.