the Chief Minister Abhyudaya Yojana. Another 10 candidates benefited from mock interview programmes under the Abhyudaya scheme.

A total of 16 candidates were enrolled for residential coaching at Bhagirathi Coaching; eight prepared at the Adarsh Examination Centre in Aliganj; four studied at the Government IAS/PCS Coaching Centre in Hapur; and 17 candidates were associated with the Abhyudaya scheme. The coaching provided by the Social Welfare Department offers candidates from Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes, and Other Backward Classes free residential facilities, meals, library access, online and offline classes, and test papers. In addition to preparation for the main examination, special sessions are organised for interviews, where subject experts and senior IAS and PCS officers guide aspirants.

New initiatives for transparency and trust

In recent years, the Uttar Pradesh Public Service Commission has taken several significant steps to make its selection process more transparent and trustworthy. The implementation of the "One Time Registration" (OTR) system has effectively curbed the issue of multiple applications by a single candidate.

Furthermore, only government and government-aided colleges are now designated as examination centres. To ensure fairness, sector and static magistrates are deployed for strict monitoring at these centres. Two sets of question papers are prepared, and the final selection of the set is made just before the commencement of the examination, thereby effectively preventing incidents such as paper leaks.

The Commission has also introduced key reforms in the selection process. The earlier "single-layer exam" system has been discontinued, and candidates are now assessed through multiple stages, making the process more comprehensive and credible. The interview process has also been restructured. Instead of a single-member board, interviews are now conducted by a four-member panel comprising two members and two experts. Selection is based on the average marks awarded by all, significantly reducing the scope for individual bias.

Looking ahead, the Commission is working towards further modernising its functioning. A state-of-the-art building named "Akashganga" is under construction, where the entire selection process will be made more secure and transparent through advanced technology. The facility will include systems to monitor the activities of officials and staff, while ensuring greater confidentiality and fairness in the interview process. This initiative is expected to further strengthen the Commission's credibility.

The rising representation of women, the impact of government initiatives, and enhanced transparency in the selection process are collectively charting a new course.
