

ARTISAN MAXIMALISM

From terracotta to teal, when the temperature rises, let your interiors turn into a sensory journey where tactile richness meets the breezy ease

By SHABNAM GUPTA

Photographs by KUBER SHAH

In India, maximalism has never really been about excess. It has always been about inheritance, about what we carry forward. A layering of craft, memory and meaning. What we are seeing today is a more nuanced evolution of this language, Artisan Maximalism, where richness is intentional and every layer carries a sense of belonging. At its core lies the Indian summer palette that is warm, sun-soaked and deeply tactile, balancing vibrancy with stillness.

This philosophy came to life in a 7,700 sq ft residence in Mumbai, set within a high-rise overlooking the Arabian Sea. The home explores a quiet paradox: how maximalism can feel light and how abundance can coexist with calm. Natural light plays a defining role, streaming in through double-height glazing and transforming the space through the day. It reveals subtle shifts in colour and texture, creating an experience that feels almost cinematic.

ECLECTIC ELEGANCE
(clockwise from above) Past the jewel-toned door, an antique Garuda stands against a handpainted, mirrored ceiling; bathroom with fluted beige walls; wooden bed and the white panelled walls in the bedroom