

BEYOND THE BLUEPRINT
(clockwise from right) Framed by the sea on one side and the river on the other, the primary bedroom at Rooh; verandah; and the exteriors with sloping roofs at the House of Quad

The Evolution of Luxury

Whether designing the Corporate Door Residence (2018) or the more recent Rooh (2024), Parambil views luxury as a layer, not a separate language. "Our process is the same regardless of budget," he says. "The difference in luxury is simply where we add more layers of detail, material and decor." The most significant shift over the years hasn't been in his tools, but in his courage. Experience has brought a new boldness to the studio. Today, his philosophy is one of constant evolution, waking up to ask, "What's new? What's interesting?" and pushing the boundaries of what a home can be.

Embracing Imperfection

Moving beyond polished surfaces, Parambil advocates for a rooted aesthetic. By prioritising the inherent beauty of a site over high-end labels, he proves that raw, local materials can create a deeper sense of home than imported marble. For the Solum project, he convinced the client to embrace rough-plastered concrete and terracotta to