Colour, Charm and Craft

Not everything needs to be perfectly symmetrical. “I like a little imperfection. Food should feel alive and inviting. A few elements slightly off-centre, different textures coming together, or a dish that looks generous rather than perfectly measured can make a plate much more interesting,” says Gupta. It’s fine to take the flavours of a familiar mithai and present them in a completely different format. You might recognise the pistachio, saffron, cardamom or rose immediately, even though the dessert looks completely different. That little moment of recognition is what makes it exciting.
