

INSIDE VIEW
(clockwise from left) One of the living rooms; main staircase with a cascading installation of glowing glass orbs; puja room; and another living space

appear, recede and re-emerge from different vantage points, making the simple act of walking through the house an engaging sensory experience.

At the core of the home sits the double-height living room, acting as the primary social anchor. Here, a striking, book-matched green quartz wall scales the height of the space, framed by expansive Volakas marble flooring and a sculptural ceiling. While the proportions are grand, we carefully maintained a deeply domestic atmosphere. Heirloom furniture, curated artworks and handcrafted objects inject immediate familiarity, ensuring that daily family life remains the true focal point. The main staircase extends this spatial choreography. Clad in elegant Rolex Grey marble and paired with a cascading installation of glowing glass orbs, it stands as a focal feature of the home. From the adjacent lounge, inhabitants can look down into the living area, offering a completely fresh perspective on the same space. As natural light shifts throughout the day, these recurring geometries morph subtly with every movement.

Materials That Speak

Materiality drives the narrative across every surface of this residence. We selected a diverse palette of premium marbles—including Volakas, Statuario, Black Marquina, Rolex Grey and Red Levanto—to introduce rich variation and visual depth. To balance the coolness of stone, we integrated timber and brass to add precision and warmth. Woven wallpapers, rich jacquards, soft rugs and custom mural panels gently soften the harder architectural planes. The resulting palette feels undeniably luxurious, yet remains grounded in natural textures and deliberate craftsmanship.

The family's extensive art collection is fully integrated into this design language, avoiding the cold feel of a museum exhibition. Pichwai panels, traditional Tanjore paintings, vibrant Madhubani works and inherited furniture sit comfortably alongside our contemporary interventions. These pieces are not displayed as mere status symbols of heritage; they reside here because they are intrinsically tied to the family's identity and carry generations of stories within them.

Intimate Sanctuaries

This emphasis on individuality becomes highly visible within the private quarters. Rather than adhering to a singular aesthetic template throughout, each bedroom is tailored to the specific personality of its occupant. The master suite features an elegant mix of timber, deep navy tones, artistic mural panels and a sculptural brass headboard. The son's bedroom utilises a versatile palette of blues and greys, paired with adaptable furniture designed to transition with him over time. Across all rooms, subtle echoes of shared geometries and materials provide a sense of architectural continuity without diminishing individual expression.

The dining room serves as a celebration of one of the home's most essential rituals: gathering for a meal. A custom-crafted table, made from Statuario marble and green quartz, rests beneath sculptural marble pendant lights, while a cherished Tree of Life artwork from the family's collection adds another layer of personal history. Directly adjacent, the kitchen adopts a quieter, highly functional tone, featuring deep taupe stainless steel cabinetry and webbed quartz surfaces that integrate utilities seamlessly into the broader architecture.

At the topmost level of the residence, the architectural language transitions into a vibrant, Art Deco-inspired retreat. Here, bold sunburst motifs, deeply saturated colour fields and heavily patterned surfaces create a highly graphic, celebratory composition.

However, despite its material richness, this home is not defined by excess. It is an exploration of coexistence, balancing the old with the new, the quiet with the theatrical and the highly personal with the shared.