

Q. Where do you see the next big wave of American investment in India coming from, and in which sectors?

Gor: Look, our bilateral trade is at an all-time high. Fifteen years ago, it used to be 20 billion dollars. Today, it's 240 billion dollars. And it goes both ways. You have incredible investment coming into the United States. The President recently hosted Essar in the Oval Office. They're opening incredible facilities, multi-billion-dollar facilities in the United States, that are creating jobs in local communities for Americans. On the other hand, this is a win-win situation. We have American companies that have moved here, especially relating to IT. Now, when they move here, that also complements a job back home. This is not a one-way street. And so, our goal is to keep increasing that bilateral trade and identify those win-win situations.

Q. Moving to energy, Secretary Rubio, could you elaborate on the national interest that President Trump has cited to justify US purchases of Russian diesel, as well as the waiver of sanctions allowing India to buy Russian crude, when the country was previously penalised for doing the same?

Rubio: Well, a couple points. The first is, right now, you're looking at the global economy, and all foreign policy has to be balanced holistically. You can't look at everything through the lens of just one country or one conflict. And while we remain very concerned and are doing all we can to bring an end to the war between Russia and Ukraine, we also recognise the impact that war is having on the global

"It's a win-win situation. You are opening multi-billion-dollar facilities in the US, creating jobs for Americans. Our companies, especially IT, have moved here; that also complements a job back home. It's not a one-way street"

"Our bilateral trade is at an all-time high. Fifteen years ago, it used to be 20 billion dollars. Today, it's 240 billion dollars. And it goes both ways. You have incredible investment coming into the US"

— GOR