the exhibition as proposing "an ethical kinship" between the artists, exploring how they used "the constraint and the freedom abstraction offers" to create shared resonances and rhythms.

Maria Isabella Barone, director of Archivio Bice Lazzari, says, "We are deeply honoured to bring Bice Lazzari's work to India and Asia for the first time." Following her major retrospective at the National Gallery of Modern and Contemporary Art in Rome in 2026, the presentation at KNMA marks "an important new chapter in the international recognition of her work". Barone highlights the significance of the dialogue with Mohamedi, whose practice shares a "profound and poetic language of line, rhythm, geometry and restraint". In-Rhythm invites visitors to consider how a single line can carry feeling, revealing abstraction as a language of discipline and freedom. ■

—Nikhil Sardana

The show is on till Dec. 22

The apparent diversity of his styles is therefore not a sign of weakness or inconsistency but evidence of an artist persistently testing the possibilities of his medium."

De's woodwork is from the 1950s and '60s, terracotta sculptures are from the '70s, and the concrete and bronze figures are from the early '80s when he returned back to his alma mater Santiniketan after spending two decades in Nigeria teaching art.

De's career folded early due to his death at 52. Says Mitra, "This is not simply an exercise in recovering a forgotten name. It is an opportunity to engage with the experiments and possibilities embodied in his work." ■

—Devarsi Ghosh

The show is on till Nov. 17

ART ▼

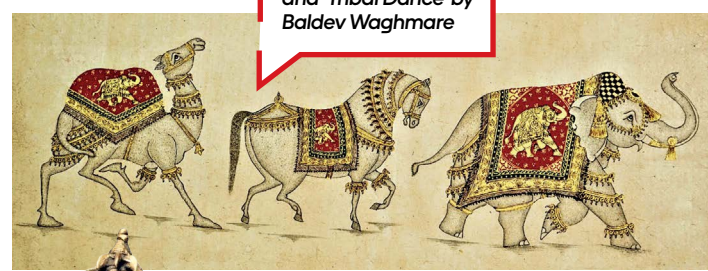

Living Traditions

A new gallery in Gurugram opens with an exhibition bringing together national awardees and master practitioners across India's traditional art forms

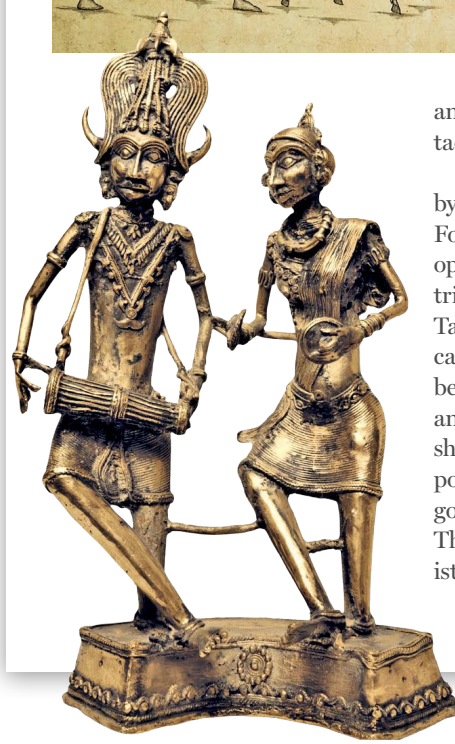

India's indigenous art traditions take centre stage at Navratna: Indigenous Masters, the inaugural exhibition at Treasure of India, a new gallery in Gurugram. Curated by art historian Uma Nair, the exhibition brings together nine award-winning practitioners working across dokra, Gond, sohrai, pattachitra, Kalighat, pichhwai and Rajasthani miniature painting.

Among the highlights are national awardee Hirabai Jharekha Baghel's dokra sculpture 'The Caparisoned Bullock Cart', with its brass detailing, and Nankusia Shyam's Gond paintings, inspired by the flora and fauna of her childhood in Madhya Pradesh. Putul Chitrakar's set of nine Kalighat paintings pays tribute to the Navdurga, while Putli Ganju's sohrai art draws on a painting tradition of decorating walls with pigments derived from natural sources. Baldev Waghmare (dokra), Leelakamt Pareek (pichhwai), Sudarshan Pareek (miniature painting), and Niranjan Maharana and Akshaya Kumar Bariki (pattachitra) are also included.

OF THE EARTH (Top to bottom) 'Songs of Earth' by Putli Ganju, 'The Royal Procession' by Sudarshan Pareekh and 'Tribal Dance' by Baldev Waghmare

The gallery is complemented by the Treasure of India Art Foundation, which aims to create opportunities for traditional and tribal artists. Founded by artist Tanisha Bakshi, the foundation carries forward a 45-year legacy begun by her father—the artist and collector Ashok Samrat Bakshi. "I wanted to extend my support as I felt these artists haven't got the right platform," she says. The foundation will organise artist residencies and workshops. ■

—Geetika Sachdev

The show is on till Dec. 27