its numbers in the latest MOTN would have plunged even further.

There is, however, no immediate threat to the Modi government. The NDA's tally is down 26 seats from the January 2026 MOTN, but it still commands a healthy 326 seats. That is significantly higher than the NDA's 293-seat tally in the May 2024 Lok Sabha election, though much of the increase stems from the BJP co-opting political formations such as the Shinde Shiv Sena and the Ajit Pawar NCP in Maharashtra and, more recently, the breakaway faction of the Trinamool Congress (TMC) in West Bengal. The NDA's overall vote share has slipped by two percentage points, largely because of a decline in the BJP's share, but the alliance still commands an impressive 45.1 per cent, compared with 42.5 per cent in the 2024 Lok Sabha election.

By comparison, the Congress-led Indian National Developmental Inclusive Alliance (INDIA) has been unable to capitalise substantially on the Modi government's troubles over the past seven months. Its tally has fallen to 185 seats, a steep drop from the 234 it won in the 2024 Lok Sabha election. Much of the decline can be attributed to assembly election setbacks suffered by key constituents, including Mamata Banerjee's TMC and Arvind Kejriwal's
