

ANOTHER RUN The cover of Prateek Kuhad's new album, Full Moon Chamber

There is a characteristic restraint to Prateek Kuhad, both in the way he sings and in the way he speaks. For more than a decade, the singer-songwriter has soundtracked the inner lives of millions across the globe with his brand of raw, acoustic energy—from the viral phenomenon of 'cold/mess' and 'Kasoor' to his 2022 full-length LP, The Way That Lovers Do.

After two years on the road following his last record, the machinery of touring finally caught up with him. "I was pretty burnt out, honestly," Kuhad admits, adding that for most of 2025, he did pretty much nothing. "After a very long time, I took time off to just chill," he shares. That period of deliberate stillness provided the perspective he needed to refine his most ambitious project yet—one he had started work on in 2023 itself. Full Moon Chamber marks Kuhad's third full-length studio album—a sprawling, 14-track record written and recorded between New York and Los Angeles that documents a period of emotional flux. "The first half of the album carries some of that uncertainty and turmoil, while the second half feels more settled. A lot changed for me personally, and in the music world around me as well. But through it all, I found a part of myself that I had lost. The album follows that journey," he says.

The title arrived near the tail end of the creative process. "I started noticing a pattern over the last couple of years, that I would get very emotionally heightened during a full moon," says Kuhad. "Someone mentioned that I should go into my own 'full moon chamber' during those times. It became a metaphor for my inner monologue—this echo chamber inside my head. These songs cover what I went through over those years."

While early releases like 'Blush' capture the rapid-fire infatuations of new beginnings and 'If I Cannot Be Yours' navigates the anxiety of losing oneself in a relationship, the record settles into warmth with tracks like 'You Make It Easy'. It culminates in 'Moonlight Serenade', a haunting closing track that Kuhad wrote, produced and mixed entirely by himself in his Los Angeles home studio.

> These songs are about the infatuation of new starts and the anxiety of losing oneself in intense bonds

Historically, Kuhad's workflow has been solitary: sitting with a guitar, crafting meticulous home demos, handing them to a producer to polish. But for the new album he threw himself out of his comfort zone, stepping straight into studio writing sessions with producers in LA and New York.

"Most of these songs were written