HIGH-END HEARTY

Familiar favourites get smarter surroundings, sharper techniques, and considerably better table manners at five much-loved London restaurants.

Rupali Dean

One thing's certain about comfort food: it's easy; familiar; friendly. But let it express itself differently, and suddenly, your all-time favourites take on new meaning, and trust us, it's worth both attendance and attention. Across London, chefs are taking the dishes people reach for instinctively, and polishing them without sanding away their soul.

Trèsind

Indian comfort classics turn fine-dining. Still comfort, but fine-dining. There are few foods more democratic than butter chicken. So naturally, Trèsind, Mayfair, places great emphasis on the dish, as it does for restaurant staples like black dal and biryani rice. Beyond the classics, however, familiar Indian flavours take considerably more adventurous turns. Gorgonzola-filled tortellini lands in smoked chicken makhani with chilli jam, while crab comes with ghee-roast masala, a dal-vada waffle and curry-leaf honey. Lamb chop is aged for a month before it meets rosemary vindaloo, chimichurri and a Goan sanna. Even the mushroom chai is more broth than beverage.

Where 13/14 Hanover St., W1S 1YH
Meal for Two £275 (₹35,000)
