

TRI-CITY: GDANSK, GDYNIA, SOPOT

After the mountains, the Baltic coast feels like a reset. The cities of Gdansk, Gdynia, and Sopot lie within a 15 to 30 minute drive of one another, close enough to experience in a single sweep rather than as separate stops.

Rebuilt after almost complete destruction at the end of the Second World War, Gdansk's Old Town retains its original Hanseatic layout, with merchant houses and guild halls restored to their historical proportions. Narrow facades, brick churches, canals, and shipyards still give the city the texture of a place shaped by centuries of trade and maritime life. The Amber Museum, relocated in 2021 to the restored Great Mill, presents amber not just as a souvenir but as a material shaped by geology, trade, and design.

North of Gdansk, Gdynia evolved during the interwar period as a modern port focussed on function, access, and maritime trade. Along the harbourfront, the past feels close at hand. The vessel ORP Blyskawica, the only allied ship to serve throughout World War II, offers insight into naval life. Moored nearby, the ship Dar Pomorza provides a quieter view of rigging and timber decks. Today, both ships serve as museum vessels, reinforcing Gdynia's maritime identity. At the Emigration Museum, situated in the former passenger terminal, stories of departure, exile, and ambition are told through personal histories, reminders that movement and migration remain part of the region's continuing story.

Sopot concludes the journey. Developed in the nineteenth century as a spa town, it still retains traces of its spa-town architecture. Its long wooden pier extends far into the Baltic and is best enjoyed at sunset when the crowds thin. In the quiet by the sea, the impressions of the journey finally begin to settle.

Gdańsk's historic waterfront is framed by the restored architecture of the city

MAKE IT HAPPEN

WARSAW
Hotel Metropol
Classic, comfortable, central;
Doubles from ₹14,000 per night

KRAKOW
Stradom House
Contemporary, design-forward stay;
Doubles from ₹26,000 per night

ZAKOPANE
Grand Hotel Stamary
Historic, elegant, a retreat from the madding herd;
Doubles from ₹15,000 per night

GDANSK
Radisson Blu Hotel
Comfortable and unfussy;
Doubles from ₹14,000 per night